

Network Access License

The Network Access License (NAL) is a requirement for marketing telecom equipment in China. Its main purpose is to ensure network compatibility between equipment and the network itself. The license is issued by the Ministry of Industry and Information Technology of the PRC (MIIT)'s Telecom Administration Bureau, and applications are processed by its Telecom Equipment Certification Centre.

According to The first catalogue of telecommunications equipment for the implementation of the NAL system, there are 28 products that should obtain NAL approval. Those items are divided into 3 main categories:

- i. Telecom terminal equipment (e.g. cordless phones, fax machines, cellular phones);
- ii. Radio communications equipment (e.g. GSM mobile communications base stations);
- iii. Networks interconnection (e.g. ADSL modem, Automated Teller Machines, routers).

The time for obtaining NAL varies according to the product for which the license is sought. Based on current regulations, the required time is normally 20 days for testing and 60 days for processing the application. Nevertheless, for some products a longer time is applicable.

Quality Partnerships LLC (QP) is here to help you determine which category your product falls under and ensure you obtain your license in the fastest possible time.

Each NAL is valid for 3 years and procedures for renewal should be initiated about 3 months prior to expiration. Once the license is obtained, each product has to be affixed with the following label:

Products that require NAL may also need other approvals, such as the China Compulsory Certification (CCC), SRRC and/or other licenses. QP is here to assist you in evaluating the best solution for minimizing the related testing and inspection time and costs, in order to have your product on the market in the shortest time possible.
